"The following lines are copied from the Richmond Examiner of November 8, 1862, and were written by Stonewall Jackson while an artiflery officer in Mexico."

[So says a correspondent; but he is mistaken. They were written by Hon. H. R. of plan; but I packed up a double supply Jackson, of Georgia, during the Mexican of 'things'; so don't worry."

Stonewall Jackson had no son then "But there's the housekeeping, and the war. Stonewall Jackson had no son then or afterwards. He was not married when this poem was written.]

My Wife and Child. The tattoo beats, the lights are gone.
The camp around in slumber lies:
The night with solemn pace moves on.
The shadows thicken o'er the skies: But sleep my weary eyes hath flor And sad, upeasy thoughts arise.

I think of thee, oh, dearest one,
Whose love my carly life hath blest;
Of thee and him, our baby son.
Who slumbers on thy gentle breast;
God of the tender, frait, and ione.

Oh, guard the tender sleepers' rest. And hover genily, hover near
To her whose watchful eye is wet;
To mother, wife, the doubly dear,
In whom young hearts have freshly met,
Two streams of love so deep and clear,
And cheer her drooping spirits yet.

Now while she kneels before Thy throne, Oh, teach her, Ruler of the skies That, while by Thy behest alone Earth's mightlest powers fall or rise, No tear is wept to Thee unknown,

No hair is lost, no sparrow dies. That Thou cans't stay the ruthless hands
Of dark disease and soothe the pain;
That only by Thy stern commands
The battle's lest, the soldier slain;
That from the distant sea or land
Thou bring'st the wanderer home again.

Thou bring'st the wanderer home again. And when upon her pillow lone Her tear-wet cheek is sadly pressed, May happier visions beam upon The brightening current of her breast,

No frowning look or angly tone Disturb the Sabbath of her rest. Whatever fate these forms may show,
Loved with a passion almost wild,
By day, by night, in joy or woe,
By fears oppressed or hopes beguiled,
From every danger, every foe,
Oh, God. project my wife and child.

The grammatical editor of the Richmond Dispatch and the venerable Rev. Dr. Jeter, senior editor of the Religious Herald, have "locked horns" over some nice points in grammar. The Dispatch man does the most successful butting, if we may so write without offence.—Wilmington Star.

We guess that the above comes from Rev. T. B. Kingsbury, who is, we learn, the editor of the Star. His opinion is worth having. He has a fine reputation as a scholar. We think that he is a D. D.

[For the Dispatch.] "An ounce of prevention is worth pound of cure." Who is the author or where is it found?

[Who can answer?]

A KISS FOR A BLOW.

"Thomas," said Miss Browne to the manservant, "what is the name of the family living in the third house below us, on this side of the street-the house with the ash' trees before it? Oliver says the name is upon in the matter of names." That be the name, Miss," said Thomas.

"Leastwise, it's Thurston on the door." "Thurston! A pretty set they must be, to ! That Thursten boy pummels Oliver wit bin an inch of his life whenever he goes out. I can't keep Oliver in the house, and the manners of our boy it must be because I can't bear this thing any longer. Why, the po or child came home yesterday with examples. his nos e bleeding and mud on his new suit, and I have made up my mind to send a line to young Thurston's father,"

" Shall I take it round, Miss?" "Directly." And Miss Nora proceeded gasped Nora. to indite this frigid note: " Mr. Thurston:

"Dear Sir,-You will doubtless be surobliged to call your attention to the behavior of your son toward our little Oliver, who can scarcely go into the street without receiving a blow from him. I have endured servant." this sort of thing till endurance is no longer a virtue, and must request your early interference. Respectfully, H. Browne."
The next day she received this reply:

"Mr. Thurston regrets that Mrs. Browne has been put to any inconvenience by the conduct of his grandson, and begs to ask if Master Oliver did not provoke the quarrel and bear his share in it."

"Our Oliver provoke a quarrel!" cried Miss Nora. "What an insolent old man," and straightway returned:
"Sir,—I cannot believe for an instant that our Oliver was to blame in the affair. I have inquired into the matter, and it voked. I am only astonished that you Perhaps I ought to have told him I was the should uphold your grandson in such a H. BROWNE." "Mr. Thurston thinks that if you can

"Sir,-I can rely implicitly on Oliver's word. And if I fail to reorganize the manners of our boy it must be because your own furnished him with such evil exam-H. BROWNE."

"What an ass that Mrs. Browne is!" said Grandpa Thurston to the person who had been doing up this tender correspond-ence for him. "Give it to the simpleton hot and heavy this time Luce. You weren't savage enough in your last."

"I propose we drop the subject here. She's a born scold, and will have the last word, say what you will"; and as Grandpa Thurston was paralyzed, and could only hold a pen by proxy, the correspondence came to a standstill.

"They found my last unanswerable," thought Nora. "What common people they must be to bring up a child so badly!
Shoddy, no doubt. I'm glad I don't know them; that people are not obliged to know their neghbors in the city. They must be insufferable."

Miss Nora Browne had been left in charge of her sister's household while that lady and her husband travelled abroad, unhampered by Master Oliver's presence. Her home was some hundred miles away inland, and her acquaintances in the city were few and far between, while even long time; and nothing could be nicer than these few were generally out of town at to have you here. And your sister has

The party was quite a family affair—Mr. and Mrs. Elphinstone, their sons and daughters, with one or two friends, making up the list.

"This is a recollar angre Norse" said phinetene."

"But you've a bousekeeper?" "And there's Oliver, and-Oh, dear! it's delightful, but I ought to be at home." "But your nephew has a nurse?" "Why he's eight years old, Nell. To be sure, his nurse lives with us still, and regards him as the apple of her eye, and Thomas looks after him like a detective; "Ch, come! throw your conscience overboard," begged Lucius, coming up to close the argument. "I'm afraid it's so light it will float, laughed Nora. "But I may as well enjoy myself," which she straightway proceeded to do, after the most approved method of flirtation, as Nell called it. Lucius got out his chess-board, and they played for hours together. "What ever can you see in that game?" Nell would barangue. "Life isn't long enough to learn it."

"It is linked sweetness, long drawn out," Lucius returned. On wet days they read Browning below, or repeated in turn all the old ballads they party. Nora acknowledged she had never had such a gay time in her life.

"Oh, if I could live on a yacht forever!" she said one star-light night, when she and Lucius were setting apart, as they had contracted a babit of doing.

"So you like a sea-faring life?" "Yes; how dull it will be to return to you; aren't you mortified?"

"Such is fame! And now?" "Why, now I feel as if I had known you a hundred years or more;" and then Nora hung her head at her own rash words. "I regret that the time has seemed so long," laughed Lucius. "To me this fortnight has seemed like a dream. Tell me about yourself, Miss Nora," he said, after a pause. "How little I know of you, in spite of our long intimacy! I've taken you entirely on trust, baven't I? 'Continual comfort in a face-the lineaments of gospel books," he quoted.

"Flattery thy name is, man. What can tell you about myself that you don't know already? Do you like boys, Mr. Elphinstone?"

"What a digression! I can tolerate them. By-the-by, speaking of boys reminds me of a correspondence I've had with an auxious mother on the subject. I rather think I have one of the precious Thurston, but the children can't be relied epistles about me; they're such sweet-tempered specimens, you ought to see them. Listen, here's one of them," as he struck a match and read: 'Mr. Thurston:

"Sir,-I can implicitly rely upon our Oliver's word. And if I fail to reorganize your own furnishes him with such evil H. BROWNE.' "There! Don't I pity Mrs. Browne! Isu't she a Xantippe? Think of marrying a woman of that kind! Ye gods!" "But-but are you not Mr. Thurston?" "Not exactly. I was his amanuensis on this interesting occasion. Grandpa Thurston has a mischievous grandson, besides

"I must go below." "Let me bring you a wrap instead, Miss Nora."

"Thanks; but it is growing late. The others have already gone; I really must follow. We get in to-morrow?" "Yes. Remember, this is our last night at sea. Let us make the most of it."

"I have enjoyed the voyage. It is only the end that is unpleasant. Good-night. He needn't have taken pains to assure me of his indiffer-it might have been all so nice." When they parted next day Miss Nora was cordial in her thanks, but omitted to ask Mr. Elphinstone to call and see her. Nobody but himself noticed the omission. "So you don't wish me to call?" he asked, deliberately. "Does our acquaintance end here?" "If you ever happen to come to Axminster I shall be glad to see you"-with a blush.

"And why may I not see you here?" "I am going home to Axminster," she evaded.

"Then I shall certainly happen to go there."

The Elphinstones went to some fashionable springs directly, and Nora lost sight of them for the nonce. She had dreaded lest Lucius should inquire her residence, and in calling establish her identity with Xantippe; and she was greatly relieved when Mr. and Mrs. Warner returned from Europe, and she could pack up and start for Axminster. But fate had not designed that the affair should end here. Nora had, indeed, fractured an arm and sustained bruises that would detain her at the Bitter Springs for some weeks; but as she began to mend she found that her lines entertain and beguile her invalid hours; brought in the latest books, the choicest flowers, amused her with the fashionable operas and titbits from burlesques of the

"You see, we had a pic-nic in the neighborhood at the time of the accident," Nell confided to Nora one day, "and I insisted upon going with Lucius to view the wreck, and do what I could for the injured, and you were the first victim we stumbled upon. Jack thinks there's nobody like him, you see. Jack and me got mad the first thing about you and him. Jack said he was the best fellow in the world, and I said you was, and I made his nose bleed, and he gave me a black eye, don't you remember, and then you wrote to his grandpa?" Nora caught Lucius's eye.

"So you are the author of those billetsdoux?" he said, laughingly.
"Yes, I am the Xantippe," humbly. "But you are not H. Browne?"

"My name is Honora Browne."

"Well, Miss Browne, since you leave tomorrow, shall we continue our correspondence?" he asked. "Tell me, Nora, could you love me a little? Will you write and tell me if I may love you forever and aye?"
he whispered, Oliver having gone down to
